Vorwort

Die Konzipierung des 114. Psalms hatte Mendelssohn kurz vor Beendigung seines Sommeraufenthaltes in Horchheim bei Koblenz 1839 abgeschlossen. Auf der Titelseite des Autographs vermerkte er: „Psalm CXIV / ‘Als Israel aus Aegypten zog etc.’ / für / Chor und Orchester“. Das auf der ersten Notenseite rechts oben angebrachte „H. D.m.“ (= Hilf Du mir) weist die Handschrift, die heute in der Deutschen Staatsbibliothek Berlin (DDR) unter der Signatur Mus. ms. autogr. 31 F.Mendelssohn Bartholdy aufbewahrt wird, als erste Niederschrift aus. Die Partitur schließt nach 20 Blättern mit der Datumsangabe: „Horchheim d. 9.August / 1839“, es folgt hierauf aber ein Anhang, der ergänzende Stimmen enthält: die Hornstimmen zum 1.Satz, die Hornstimmen und eine Timpanistimme zum zweiten Satz, ferner die Hornstimmen zum 3. und 4.Satz und schließlich die gesamte Bläserpartitur (Flauti, Oboi, Clarinetti, Fagotti, Corni) zum letzten Satz. Diese merkwürdige Anordnung weist darauf hin, daß die Arbeit an dem Werk im Sommer 1839 noch nicht beendet war.

Der fast zwei Jahre später erschienene Erstdruck zeigt gegenüber der ersten Niederschrift in der Tat überraschend viele Abweichungen. Ihre Zahl ist so groß, daß im Grunde nur die vollständige Gegenüberstellung von Autograph und Erstdruck die Einzelheiten wirklich verdeutlichen könnte. Eine lückenlose Aufzählung aller Abänderungen würde mehrere Seiten füllen und ist aus diesem Grunde hier nicht möglich. Dieser Verzicht fällt um so leichter, als der für die Forschung zwar interessante Befund für die Musikpraxis kaum von Belang ist. Denn in der gedruckten Partitur von 1841 liegt uns eine von Mendelssohn selbst autorisierte Gestalt des Werkes vor. Zur Verdeutschung seien hier aber, ohne einer wissenschaftlichen Ausgabe vorgreifen zu wollen, einige ausgewählte Besonderheiten angesprochen.

Die Tempobezeichnungen lauten

	im Autograph (1839)	im Druck (1841)
1.Da Israel ...	Moderato	Allegro con moto maestoso
2.Das Meer sah ...	Con moto	Allegro moderato
3.Was war dir ...	Grave	Grave
4.Vor dem Herrn ...	Allegro maestoso	Allegro maestoso e vivace
5.Da Israel .../ Halleluja ...	Piu animato ursprüngl.: Allegro maestoso	Con moto come Ia

Außer den Tempoangaben wurde auch der Umfang des Notentextes selbst an mehreren Stellen wesentlich verändert. Der 2.Satz enthält in der endgültigen Fassung fünf Takte mehr (T. 144–147 und 153) als die erste Niederschrift, und der 4. Satz wurde teils erweitert (T. 209–238) und teils gekürzt (je ein Takt fiel nach T. 252 und 264 weg). Der gesamte Beginn des 5. Satzes, die Takte 266–295, fehlt noch im Autograph. Dort bildet das „Halleluja, singet...“ den Anfang. Ebenso kamen erst später die Takte 305, 308 und 314.2–316.1 hinzu. Die Achtelfiguren in den Streichern ab T. 339 waren zunächst als Sechzehntelrepetitionen geschrieben, und den Schlußtakten ab T. 421 eignete der Text „Halleluja in Ewigkeit“. Durch die neue Textierung mit den Worten „Da Israel ...“ wurde zugleich die Einfügung der Takte 427 und 428 erforderlich.

Hinter diesen und den zahlreichen weiteren Änderungen stand vermutlich nicht nur Mendelssohns eigene, bei dem von ihm selbst geleiteten Aufführungen gemachten Erfahrungen, sondern auch die Berücksichtigung einer Kritik, die das Werk bei der Uraufführung am 1.Januar 1840 hervorgerufen hatte. In der Leipziger „Allgemeinen Musikalischen Zeitung“ (Jg. 42, 1840, S.26/27) nannte der Rezensent den Psalm zwar „eine der grossartigsten Kompositionen, welche er [Mendelssohn] je geschrieben“, bemängelte aber den formalen Aufbau, da nach dem Chor „Vor dem Herrn bebt die Erde“, den er als „Mittel- und Wendepunkt“ ansah, „das unmittelbare Anschließen eines einzigen Chores weder der Form noch der Wirkung nach ausreichend“ sei. Dieser „einzig Chor“ muß das von Mendelssohn angefügte „Halleluja“ gewesen sein, das sich im Autograph unmittelbar an den Satz „Vor dem Herrn ...“ anschloss hatte. „Als selbständiger Theil betrachtet“, so fährt die Kritik fort, „ist aber ein einzelner Chor ausser Verhältnis zu dem grossen inhaltreichen Vordertheil, abgesehen davon, dass er so allein hingestellt, auch ziemlich unmotiviert erscheint. Ein längerer, aus mehreren einzelnen Stücken bestehender Zusatz würde vielleicht für Form und Wirkung des schönen Werkes nicht unvortheilhaft gewesen sein“.

Mendelssohn griff den wohlmeinenden Rat auf und stellte die Verbindung zwischen dem eigentlichen Psalmtext und dem „Halleluja“ durch die zuvor genannten Erweiterungen, insbesondere durch die Hinzufügung der Takte 266–295 und durch die Textänderung des Schlusses her. Nunmehr war das „Halleluja“ deutlich auf die Hauptaussage des Psalmtextes bezogen.

Die Komposition hatte Mendelssohn zuerst Friedrich Kistner in Leipzig zum Druck angeboten, doch zog er seine Zusage Anfang 1840 mit der Begründung zurück, Breitkopf und Härtel hätten ältere Rechte an dem Werk (vgl. Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy, Briefe an deutsche Verleger. Hrsg. von Rudolf Elvers, Berlin 1968, S.310). Es dauerte dann bis zur Drucklegung bei Breitkopf und Härtel noch ein ganzes Jahr. Am 9.Januar 1841 endlich konnte Mendelssohn seinem Freund, dem Düsseldorfer Maler Johann Wilhelm Schirmer (1807–1863), dem er den Psalm gewidmet hatte, den Klavierauszug schicken. Erst im März des gleichen Jahres folgten Partitur und Orchesterstimmen. Zwischen dem Klavierauszug¹ und der Partitur bestehen, obwohl beide von Mendelssohn selbst beaufsichtigt, geringfügige Unterschiede, die in der vorliegenden Neuausgabe an die Lesarten der Partitur angeglichen wurden. So lautete z.B. im Klavierauszug T. 60 der Alt 1 fernher beschränkte er in T. 169/170 das <=> allein auf den T. 170 und notierte in T. 203/204 die Stimmeinsätze durch ein Forte-Zeichen (im Neudruck eingeklammert).

In den Briefen an Wilhelm Schirmer schlägt sich etwas von Mendelssohns Empfinden nieder, das eine besondere innere Verbindung zu seinem Werk verrät (vgl. E.Schirmer: Briefe Felix Mendelssohns an J.W. Schirmer. In: Die Musik II,4, 1903, S. 83–88). Auffällig ist in diesem Zusammenhang die Erwähnung einer „schweren Krankheit“ im Herbst 1840 und die Bemerkung, das Stück sei „schwerlich für das sogenannte Publikum", hingegen ihm selbst sei es „besonders ans Herz gewachsen". Es zeigt sich hier wie in anderen Werken Mendelssohns Mut, sich dem Zeitgeschmack zu widersetzen und eine Eigenständigkeit zu behaupten, die ihre Sicherheit auf die Wahrhaftigkeit der eigenen Person gründet. Die für Mendelssohn charakteristische sujektbezogene Dimension seiner Kunst formulierte wenige Jahre nach Mendelssohns Tod Moritz Hauptmann gegenüber Franz Hauser – beide dem Freundeskreis um Mendelssohn angehörend – so: „Es wird immer darauf ankommen, wie es dem Componisten selbst zu Muthe ist bei der Composition, und ob seine Kunst seiner Phantasie folgen kann" (Moritz Hauptmann: Briefe an F. Hauser, 2. Band, Leipzig 1871, S. 162f.). Die in der Musik zum Ausdruck gelangte Affinität zwischen Mendelssohns Empfinden und der bekannten Aussage des Psalmtextes ist unüberhörbar. Das in der jüdischen Tradition wurzelnde Danklied eines Volkes, dem Mendelssohn durch seine Geburt eng verbunden war, findet im majestatischen Ton seiner Komposition den angemessenen Ausdruck.

Hingewiesen sei noch auf eine Besonderheit des Leipziger Partiturexemplars: Dort ist in den Takteten 168–191 handschriftlich ein Bläzersatz eingefügt, der den Chor colla parte stützt. Da es sich nicht um die Schrift Mendelssohns handelt, verzichtet die Neuausgabe auf die Übernahme dieser Eintragungen.

Dem vorliegenden Partitur-Neudruck liegt der bei Breitkopf & Härtel 1841 erschienene Erstdruck zugrunde. Neu gestochen wurden die Chorstimmen samt dem unterlegten Text. Der instrumentale Teil hingegen gibt das alte Stichbild wieder. Ergänzend hinzugefügt sind Taktzähler und Buchstabengliederung. Der englische Text wurde neu gefaßt. Den hilfreichen Bibliotheken, der Musikbibliothek der Stadt Leipzig (Partitur-Erstdruck) und der Musikabteilung der Deutschen Staatsbibliothek Berlin (DDR, Partitur-Autograph) sei für ihre Unterstützung herzlich gedankt.

Foreword

Mendelssohn completed the draft of The 114th Psalm shortly before the end of his summer sojourn in Horchheim (near Coblenz) in 1839. On the title page of his autograph he wrote: "Psalm CXIV / 'Als Israel aus Aegypten zog etc.' / für / Chor und Orchester" ('As Israel departed from Egypt etc.' for Chorus and Orchestra). "H.D.m." ("Hilf du mir" – German for "Help Thou me") in the upper right corner of the first page of the score identifies the manuscript that is now preserved in the Deutsche Staatsbibliothek Berlin (German State Library in Berlin, GDR) – under catalogue no. Mus. ms. autogr. 31 F. Mendelssohn Bartholdy – as the first written manuscript. The score closes, after 20 sheets, with the date line in German "Horchheim, August 9, 1839", but there is an appendix that contains additional parts: the horn parts for the second number, the horn parts for the third and fourth numbers, as well as the complete score for the wind instruments (flutes, oboes, clarinets, bassoons, horns) of the last number. This odd arrangement indicates that work on this composition was not concluded in the summer of 1839.

The first printing, that did not appear until nearly two years later, does indeed reveal surprisingly many differences to the first manuscript – so many, in fact, that in principle only complete comparison of the autograph and the first printing could bring true clarity. A full list of all the changes would fill several pages and is, consequently, not possible here. What favours omitting the list here is that, although the findings are quite interesting for the research scholar, there are of rather negligible importance for the performance of the work. For with the printed score of 1841, we have a version of the work that was authorized by Mendelssohn himself. Even though we do not wish to anticipate a scientific edition, let us, nonetheless, mention a few select features for better understanding.

	Tempo markings read: 1839 Autograph	1841 Printing
1. Da Israel ...	Moderato	Allegro con moto maestoso
2. Das Meer sah ...	Con moto	Allegro moderato
3. Was war dir ...	Grave	Grave
4. Vor dem Herrn ...	Allegro maestoso	Allegro maestoso e vivace
5. Da Israel ... / Halleluja ...	Piu animato (originally: Allegro maestoso).	Con moto come I ^a

In addition to the tempo markings, the length of the score itself was altered considerably at several places. The second number contains five bars more (bars 144–147 and 153) in the final version than in the first, and the fourth number was in part expanded (bars 209–238), in part shortened (a bar was dropped after both bar 252 and bar 264). The whole beginning of the fifth number, bars 266–295, is missing in the autograph where it begins with "Halleluja, singet..." Bars 305, 308 and 314.2–316.1 were also added later. The eighth-note figures (from bar 339) were first written as sixteenth-note repetitions, and the closing bars (from bar 421) were suitable for the text "Halleluja in Ewigkeit" (Hallelujah in eternity). The words of the new text "Da Israel ..." made it also necessary to add bars 427 and 428.

Behind these and the many other changes were presumably not just the experiences that Mendelssohn himself gained from the performances that he conducted, but also consideration of the criticism called forth upon the first performance of the work on January 1, 1840. The reviewer of the Allgemeine Musikalische Zeitung (42nd year: 1840, pp. 26f) of Leipzig called the psalm "one of the most magnificent compositions that he [Mendelssohn] had ever written", it is true, but he faulted the formal structure because after the chorus "Vor dem Herrn bebte die Erde" (Before the Lord the earth trembled), that he considered the "central and turning point" of the work, "the immediate following of a single chorus [was] adequate neither with respect to the form nor to the effect." This "single chorus" must have been the "Hallelujah" that Mendelssohn added and that had immediately followed "Vor dem Herrn..." in the autograph. "But as an independent number," the reviewer continues, "a single chorus is out of proportion to the long, rich-content first part, aside from the fact that, placed so alone, it also seems quite unmotivated. A longer adjunct consisting of several individual pieces might not have been a disadvantage to the form and effect of the lovely work."

Mendelssohn accepted the well-meaning advice and joined the actual psalm text with the "Hallelujah" by making the above-mentioned modifications – especially the addition of bars 266–295 – and by changing the closing text. Thus the "Hallelujah" clearly became related to the main statement found in the psalm text.

The composition was first offered to Friedrich Kistner in Leipzig for publication, but Mendelssohn withdrew his permission at the beginning of 1840, on the grounds that Breitkopf & Härtel had older rights to the work (cf. Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy, Briefe an deutsche Verleger [Letters to German Publishers], edited by Rudolf Elvers, Berlin 1968, p.310). Another whole year then passed before it came to print at Breitkopf & Härtel. On January 9, 1841, Mendelssohn was at last able to send the piano reduction to his friend, the Düsseldorf painter Johann Wilhelm Schirmer (1807–1863), to whom he had dedicated the psalm. The full score and orchestral parts did not follow until March of that year. Although Mendelssohn himself had watched over the printing of both, there were slight differences between the piano reduction and the full score, differences that this new edition has adjusted to the versions of the full score. For example, in the piano score Alto I in bar 60 reads the < > of bars 169f is restricted to bar 170 alone, and a forte sign (in parentheses in the new printing) for the parts entering in bars 203f.

The letters to Wilhelm Schirmer record some of Mendelssohn's feelings that, in turn, reveal his especially intimate relationship to his work (cf. E. Schirmer, Briefe Felix Mendelssohns an J.W.Schirmer, in Die Musik II/4, 1903, pp.83–88). What is striking in this regard is the mention of a "severe illness" in the fall of 1840, as well as the remark that the piece was "hardly for the so-called public" but that it had "grown particularly dear to his [own] heart". This shows, just as in other works, that Mendelssohn had the courage to go against the tastes of the time and to assert his own judgement that based its certainty on the sincerity of his own person. This subjective dimension that is characteristic of Mendelssohn's artistic output was formulated as follows to Franz Hauser by Moritz Hauptmann – both belonged to Mendelssohn's circle of friends – a few years after Mendelssohn's death: "It will always depend on how the composer feels while composing and on whether his artistry can follow his fantasy" (Moritz Hauptmann, Briefe an F. Hauser; Leipzig 1871, pp.162f.). As expressed in the music, the affinity between Mendelssohn's feelings and the credo-like statement in the psalm text cannot be overheard. Rooted in the Jewish tradition, it is the song of thanks of a people to whom Mendelssohn, through his birth, had close ties and found fitting expression in the majestic tone of his composition.

Attention is called to one distinctive detail in the Leipzig score: In bars 168–191, a group of wind instruments has been written in by hand to reinforce the choir colla parte. As the handwriting is not Mendelsohn's, these entries have not been incorporated into our edition.

The present edition is based on the first printing of the full score that was published in Leipzig by Breitkopf & Härtel (plate no. 6479) in 1841. The choral parts, together with their underlying texts, were newly engraved. The instrumental parts, on the other hand, show the impressions of the old plates. Bar numbers and section letters have been added. The English text appears in a new translation. We are sincerely grateful to the Musikbibliothek der Stadt Leipzig (Music Library of the City of Leipzig) for the first printing of the full score and the Deutsche Staatsbibliothek Berlin for the autograph of full score as well as for their kind assistance.

The musical score consists of six staves, each with a treble clef and a key signature of one flat. The first three staves are for strings (two violins, viola, cello), the next two for woodwinds (oboe, bassoon), and the last one for bassoon. The score is divided into measures by vertical bar lines. Large, stylized letters 'C', 'A', 'R', 'U', and 'S' are superimposed on the music, with 'C' appearing in the first two measures, 'A' in the third, 'R' in the fourth, 'U' in the fifth, and 'S' in the sixth. The lyrics begin in measure 88:
